Abstract. This paper evaluates the influence of corporate governance on the risk taking of Japanese firms. We find that family control and ownership concentration are associated with higher idiosyncratic risk, whereas bank control has the opposite consequence. Considering the link between idiosyncratic risk and firm performance, the results provide a rationale for the higher (lower) performance of family-corporate governance mechanisms, such as ownership structure, interact with national regulations in shaping the risk taking behavior of individual banks. This gap is surprising because standard agency theories suggest that ownership structure influences corporate risk taking (Jensen and Meckling, 1976; John, Litov, and Yeung, 2008).
